

Kid-friendly, flavored disposable e-cigarettes will remain available under the Administration's plan

The New York Times

Teens Find a Big Loophole in the New Flavored Vaping Ban

The policy allows mint, dessert and fruit flavors to continue to be sold in disposable e-cigarettes, prompting many teens to switch from Juul to those devices.

"It's rampant," Kristina Rodgers, the principal of Roosevelt High School in Seattle, said of the rising use of disposable vaping devices.

"Students were telling me that everybody had gone to Puff Bars, which are disposable," said Lauren W. Williams, a teacher at McCracken, near Paducah, Ky.

"Costing between $7 and $10 per disposable e-cigarette, Puff Bar is cheaper than Juul.

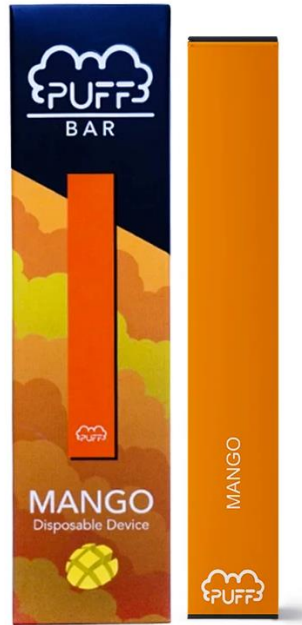

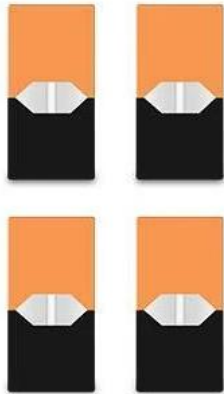

'For me it wasn't about it being easier to get, it was more cost-effective. I'd have to save up $30 to buy a pack of Juul pods,' Daniella said."

Puff Bar Disposable Device

$8.99 - $10.99

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/01/31/health/vaping-flavors-disposable.html>

Disposable e-cigarettes are gaining popularity with kids

“Puff came out as the new popular thing that every single kid was doing and I hopped on that fad,” she explained. “They have flavors like the Juul flavors. It’s basically like smoking a Juul.”

Bennett Kelly, a high school senior from Costa Mesa, Calif. has also switched to Puff Bar.

“They have the best flavoring,” he said. “They have the most nicotine content.”